New CFTC Flexibility for Hedge Fund Managers

The ability of fund, CFTC and the states to implement new rules and other regulatory measures to ensure that hedge funds do not abuse the discovery system and are subject to adequate control is still an open question. However, if the new rules and other regulatory measures are effective, it may be possible to implement new rules and other regulatory measures to ensure that hedge funds do not abuse the discovery system and are subject to adequate control.

The ability of fund, CFTC and the states to implement new rules and other regulatory measures to ensure that hedge funds do not abuse the discovery system and are subject to adequate control is still an open question. However, if the new rules and other regulatory measures are effective, it may be possible to implement new rules and other regulatory measures to ensure that hedge funds do not abuse the discovery system and are subject to adequate control.

The ability of fund, CFTC and the states to implement new rules and other regulatory measures to ensure that hedge funds do not abuse the discovery system and are subject to adequate control is still an open question. However, if the new rules and other regulatory measures are effective, it may be possible to implement new rules and other regulatory measures to ensure that hedge funds do not abuse the discovery system and are subject to adequate control.

The ability of fund, CFTC and the states to implement new rules and other regulatory measures to ensure that hedge funds do not abuse the discovery system and are subject to adequate control is still an open question. However, if the new rules and other regulatory measures are effective, it may be possible to implement new rules and other regulatory measures to ensure that hedge funds do not abuse the discovery system and are subject to adequate control.

The ability of fund, CFTC and the states to implement new rules and other regulatory measures to ensure that hedge funds do not abuse the discovery system and are subject to adequate control is still an open question. However, if the new rules and other regulatory measures are effective, it may be possible to implement new rules and other regulatory measures to ensure that hedge funds do not abuse the discovery system and are subject to adequate control.

The ability of fund, CFTC and the states to implement new rules and other regulatory measures to ensure that hedge funds do not abuse the discovery system and are subject to adequate control is still an open question. However, if the new rules and other regulatory measures are effective, it may be possible to implement new rules and other regulatory measures to ensure that hedge funds do not abuse the discovery system and are subject to adequate control.